By JOSIAH QUINCY.

"The inroads upon our public liberty, call for reparation.—The wrongs we have sustained, call for Justice. That Reparation and that Justice, may yet be obtained, by Union, Spirit, and Firmness. But to divide and conquer was the maxim of the Devil in the garden of Eden, and to divide and enslave hath been the principle of all his votaries from that period to the present."

The Gazette.
PHILADELPHIA.
TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 1.
CONGRESS.
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.
Debate on Mr. Griswold's motion,
THURSDAY, December 27.

After asking leave of the house to speak a third time,

Mr. Nicholas apologized for again troubling the house; but the notice which had been taken of what had fallen from him, made it necessary. He had been charged with advocating principles destructive of republican government; as making a most violent and wicked attack upon the government of this country, and upon all its order and happiness.
Mr. N. said he was astonished that gentlemen should not have remarked the difference between the case which he had stated; and how much they bring into question the principles of our government, to make an effort to procure peace for the country, an usurpation of the Executive authority; by making it as criminal to procure peace for the country as to bring war upon it. It would appear as if the government had been forced into a peace which they did not want. Can peace, asked Mr. N. be made without the concurrence of government? Certainly not; therefore, the only possible evil which could arise to the government from the interference of individuals for the purpose of procuring peace to the country, would be, that it might be forced to make peace against its will, on terms which it dare not refuse. The natural and obvious difference betwixt an attempt to procure peace for the country, and an attempt to procure war for it, is, that peace cannot be made without the consent of our government, but war may. Is it not possible, said Mr. N. that a majority of Congress may have interest distinct from those of their constituents—an interest which they dare not avow—which may induce them to wish for war? And if such a war could be averted by any innocent means, the people would have cause to rejoice at the event. But it had been said that the people of America would not give a cordial reception to any citizen who should be the means of procuring peace for his country by his individual exertions; that they would not accept of peace on such terms; that the people of America with-ed rather for war, than a peace so procured.
Mr. N. did not think this opinion correct.

The gentleman from South Carolina, (Mr.
Harper) had taken different ground from any other gentleman. He points at a particular case which is laid to have taken place. It would be well if that gentleman had attended to what had been said relative to that case, which was, that having no information before the house, no one could be said to understand it. That it could not be said, that it had produced either good or bad effects; and, not knowing any thing about it, the house could not be prepared to act upon it.
But that gentleman can always dive to the bottom of every thing at once. He has found a clue to this business. He has traced it to a set of men (at least as respectable as himself) and made it to consist of a system of treachery such as his imagination delights to conjure up. Heretofore, said Mr. N. these extravagancies have passed unanswered by me because I believed that no man besides the fabricator of them could for a moment give credit to such stories. These insinuations, however, may have found credit; he believed they had. At least, they have been propagated by men whose views they answered.
Unfortunately, however, for the gentleman from South Carolina, said Mr. N. there is one circumstance which renders it impossible that his statement of facts should be true.— We are come to the crisis when the faction which the gentleman speaks of (if such an one exists) ought to make use of the fruits of the late agency (as he chuses to term it) but none is made of them. And surely, if a faction employ an agent to negotiate with a foreign government, they will not do it for nothing. Yet this appears to be the case, according to that gentleman.

Has the gentleman found any member of this house advising us to lay aside our arms, and take a different situation from that in which we at present stand? He believed not.
During the last session, a great many things were done which were thought by many unnecessary and improper; but all agreed that we ought to be prepared for defending ourselves. Now, said Mr. N. let the gentleman from South Carolina use his own understanding, and say how this conduct of gentlemen can be reconciled? That a party should send a person to France to get things put into a certain train, and then make no use of the effects produced; that when they had nothing to do but make a disposition of the business, they abandon it altogether. The gentleman from South Carolina had so long indulged himself in themes of this kind that they must cease to have effect upon the minds of the most credulous. The only proof which he has adduced in support of his assertion, that a certain gentleman who lately returned from France was the agent of a party, is, that an individual would never have engaged in so foolish a thing; that it would have been an act of madness in an individual and yet he supposes a collection of individuals would be more capable of this mad act! That the person alluded to is only fit for journey-work, and not fit to undertake a work of extreme folly, as men of superior understandings!

The gentleman allows that there have been fanatics of a certain religious persuasion who have gone great lengths in order to procure peace for contending nations. How did that gentleman know that the religious principles of that society may not have had some effect in a late transaction. The gentleman concerned was educated a Quaker, and though he did not now conform to their habits, he may still retain principles peculiar to that sect which had been early instilled on his mind.

It had been said, that the French government has declared that they have a party in this country. Mr. N. denied that he had any knowledge of such a declaration. The only thing of the kind which he heard of, was said by Mr. X, who never pretended to be an agent of the French government.
Mr. N. denied that the outrages of the French government had ever been justified by the friends of peace in this house; and if he understood what had taken place in France of a favorable nature to this country, he believed no measure complained of at the last session had been since changed; but that the relaxation which had taken place related to measures adopted after that time, and, of course, unknown to congress at their last session.
The gentleman from S. Carolina had called the transaction alluded to, foolish, weak and ineffectual, because no individual could produce a change in the conduct of the French government. Mr. N. differed in opinion from that gentleman. He believed, in most instances, the efforts of an individual must have been weak and foolish, and brought shame and disgrace upon the person who undertook them; but he believed, if ever there was a case in which an individual might be serviceable in restoring peace to two countries, it is the present. It is not notorious, said Mr. N. that if the French have enemies in this country, they have been continually playing into their hands from the commencement of the dispute betwixt this country and that? He appealed to the gentleman from S. Carolina himself whether he had not received more support in his favorite objects, from the conduct of France, than from any thing else? Their system had all along been calculated to produce a total dependence in this upon the enemies of France. If this was so, the French were playing the most unnatural and foolish game that ever was played by any country. It ought to have been in the power of a child to have illuminated France on this subject.
He asked whether the outrages of the French government had not been received in this country with triumph and exultation? He knew they had, and he had seen them made the foundation of darling measures in this house. This being the case, said Mr. N. was it not in the power of an individual to lay to persons in power in that country, "you are acting very unwisely; you are losing all your friends in America; as to supposing you have a party in that country who would be ready to join your standard, were you to hoist it there, it is nonense; but you are establishing a national hatred there, which will throw weight into the scale of your enemy." Would not a conduct of this kind have appeared proper to a person of the commonest understanding, and much more so to the gentleman alluded to, and such a representation could have produced none but a good effect. Without knowing any thing of the mission of this gentleman (for he had left Philadelphia a month before it took place) he did believe, that observations of this kind had occurred to that gentleman as likely to produce a good effect, as they had occurred to thousands besides in this country; and they were observations which an American had a right to to, and which he might conceive it to be his duty to make, and which must have had their effect upon the French government.
Mr. N. had heard a great deal about subjugation. The gentleman from S. Carolina had expressed an opinion that whilst the people under a popular government remain united, they cannot be conquered by force.
He would himself go further, and declare it to be his opinion, and it was founded upon a knowledge of the disposition of men who think your government have done extremely bad acts, that so long as the people are not actually oppressed, and they can see in their government the seeds of corruption, no attempt at dividing or subjugating the people of this country could be successful. There is not a man amongst those who are the most dissatisfied with some of the measures of government, who would not fight as soon as against the French, as against any other nation who injured them. He believed there is a perfect unanimity in this respect. Let the government, therefore, said he, take care not to infuse dissatisfaction into the minds of these people, by carrying things with too high a hand, by oppressing one part of the people, to benefit another. Mr.
N. believed that the gentleman from S. Carolina would not have been willing to have lived under any of the old governments, the overturning of which he so feelingly deplored.
—Is it, said he, the fault of the people that they live under bad government? or because they are bad are they never to be changed? Are people who are bound down by the chains of tyranny, for ever to remain so?
—And was it right or just, to charge the violence and blood, which too generally attend revolutions, upon the people who have been oppressed, instead of their oppressors?
Surely not. The evils must be deplored, but they ought to be charged to the proper account.

Mr. N. believed more evil was to be apprehended in this country from the votaries of despotism, than from the votaries of France. Gentlemen are constantly telling the world, that nothing ought to be done, no sentiment offered in opposition to regular government. Why? Because it produces divisions in a country. And this is not only the language held here, but it is held in all the old governments of the world. What do such opinions lead to? Certainly to favor the principles of despotism, which it was to be lamented, have of late, had a greater spread than those of liberty, owing to the abuses which had been committed under its sacred name, and the use made of those abuses; and the doctrines now held are calculated to subvert all the liberties of our country, by sowing every opposition to the measures of government, however violent they may be. Gentlemen cry, this is not the time to clamour against the government, all ought now to be union; and this will continue to be the cry, so that a time for bringing a government back to its first principles will never arrive, and abuses will thus be perpetuated. Principles, Mr. N. said, he was sorry, had gained ground in this country, of late, which nothing but terror and alarm could have produced.

Mr. N. Smith said, the gentlemen from Pennsylvania and Virginia have taken ground perfectly characteristic of the two men; whilst the gentleman from Virginia comes forward and boldly avows the right of an individual to interfere in our negotiations with a foreign government, the gentleman from Pennsylvania goes into detail, and leaps an aquateme in the resolution; says it goes too far in some respects, and not far enough in others; that it will prevent correspondences about private concerns, and so on. Why this sort of trifling, if it were not intended to lead the house off from the spirit of the resolution? The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows too much of legislative business not to know, that this resolution, worded as it now is, cannot pass into a law; that it is only intended as an instruction to a committee upon which to report a bill, which bill will have to undergo the scrutiny of that gentleman, and of the house. He did not himself like all the provisions of this resolution; he thought the interference instead of being general, would have been better confined to France; but these are matters for after consideration. The only proper enquiry at present is, Is there reason for legislative interference, or not? Is there, or not, danger to be apprehended from the interference of individuals in business of this sort. For himself, he had no hesitation in saying he believed there is danger to be apprehended from this source. He considered this as a measure of defence; of efficient defence pointed to the danger—danger with which we are threatened—danger from the diplomatic skill of a nation well versed in this skill. We have said Mr. S. heretofore made provision for the raising of armies. These were for remote danger; but this a provision against danger which immediately threatens us—a danger which has assailed us for many years past—a danger which has produced the most direful effects in this country. He himself never thought there was immediate danger to be apprehended from the arms of France, though, at some future period, there might be danger from this source, but their diplomatic skill ought to be constantly and strictly guarded against.

NEWS FROM HAMBURG.

A vessel has arrived at Newburyport from Hamburg, bringing papers to the latter end of October.

These papers contain an account (under "Hague, Oct. 20") that the French government have repealed their decree against neutral property consisting of English manufactures or produce.

They advise of the breaking off of the negotiations at Raftadt; and of the receipt of dispatches by the French Directory from Buonaparte, No. 2. and 3. (the first having been intercepted by the English) stating his success in Egypt—his engraving his name on Pompey's pillar—the celebration of the opening of the Nile—and the abundant supply of his army.

The foregoing was reported to us verbally. The Newburyport paper of this day undoubtedly contains more copious accounts.

A Hamburg paper of the 4th of October gives a list of exiles from France, since the first revolution of the 14th of July, 1789, which have entered Germany and its dependencies; the total of which is 120,408.

Late and Important.

It is with infinite satisfaction, that I find myself enabled to begin the Year with the exhilarating intelligence subjoined. The weather is cold; but he must be an insensible log who does not glow with warmth on reading such news as this. For my part, it will last me through the winter. Nothing now remains, to end the bloody farce of French republicanism, but for America to follow up these afflictions by her home stroke. It only remains for America to declare war! and the French republic is no more. Then shall we need no labored definitions of the crime of treason; then shall we hear no more of opposition to alien and sedition bills. Assuming a decisive tone,—exalting ourselves on higher, stronger, and more honorable ground,—in short, no longer "caupontes bellum, fed belligerantes," we strike the death-blow at Faction and exact to endless renown the fame of America.

NEW-YORK, Dec. 31.

The following very important Intelligence we received yesterday evening from Boston.

Boston, December 25.

On Sunday arrived at Newburyport, ship America, Jenkins, in 56 days from Hamburg. A good friend furnished us with papers to October 27 [principally the Altona Mercury] and Mr. Kahier kindly assisted us last night in making the subsequent translations.

Vienna, October 15.

Yesterday a courier arrived from the Turkish government to their minister, and brought dispatches which were soon afterwards communicated to the British and Prussian Plenipotentiaries. They state that on the 9th of September, the Beys of Egypt, having collected a large army at Cairo, an obstinate battle was fought which continued through the whole of the day; and that in the following night Buonaparte retreated to Rosetta to which place he was soon followed; tho' so reduced was his army as not to consist of more than 10 or 12,000 men. Another attack upon him was preparing, when he consented to capitulate; but he was refused any other terms than a surrender to the discretion of the Beys, as they were all certain of him, it being impossible for him to advance or retreat farther; and in this condition the last correct intelligence left him. The dispatches state in addition, and from the same authority, that admiral Nelson has succeeded in completely destroying the transports and armed ships in Alexandria harbour. He directed some bomb vessels to sustain the fire of the forts which the French had erected on shore, while fire-ships were sent in among the transports. The transports were moored in a line extending from the recess of the harbor towards the entrance. The wind favoured; and soon after the flames took the first vessel, it spread to the remainder. The whole number of transports destroyed was 366, including several Russian and Venetian vessels, particularly two Venetian ships of the line. The Mamelukes by agreement diverted the crews on shore; the rest escaped. [Several preceding accounts favour this news and a subsequent account in a Vienna postscript appears to confirm it.]

October 17.

By information from Malta, the rising of the inhabitants against the French is confirmed. They are driven to the castle of St. Elmo; have asked for terms; but have been refused, and summoned to surrender as prisoners of war. Throughout the whole island the French flag has given place to the Maltese. Buonaparte left 5000 of his troops here; but by desertion and slaughter they have dwindled away. The Russians, Turks and English were preparing to attack it, previous to these events, with a strong combined force.]

The British ship Colossus, off Malta, had captured one of the French ships which escaped from the Nile.

Constantinople, Sept. 21.

IMPORTANT DETECTION.

Jean Bon St. Andre, late French resident at Smyrna, was this day with his suite brought here, and lodged in the castle of the Seven Towers. Among his papers was found a plan for revolutionizing the Ottoman Empire. In consequence of this, 30,000 men are ordered to certain places where French politics have been favored. Thirty seven cannon were found in the Palace Francaise, lately occupied by the French minister at Constantinople, but now converted into a prison, where even the Emigrant French, who have taken an oath of fidelity to the Grand Seigneur, are confined.

Hamburg, Oct. 8.

Advices from Florence of Sept. 18th, say that the French have entered the Neapolitan dominions in an hostile manner, though without a formal declaration of war.

We learn from Paris, under date of Sept. that the Turkish Minister was that day arrested and thrown into the Temple.

October 13.

We hear that, besides the aigrette given by the Grand Seigneur to Admiral Nelson, he had ordered a rich present to every British officer in the action at the Nile, and 80,000 dollars to be distributed among the sailors.

The confidence of the Grand Seigneur is so great in his new friends the Russians, that he visited the commander of the fleet before Constantinople on board his ship Incognito. The Russians were at first loth to enter the city of Constantinople; but they are now every day seen walking arm in arm with the Turks.

October 18.

The French with 8000 men from Switzerland have entered the Austrian territory, and already committed some excesses. It is said the Emperor considers this as the actual recommencement of hostilities.

October 25.

A new paper on the subject of the pending negociation was presented by the Austrian envoy at Raftadt on the 18th instant. It was short, and does not appear to accelerate peace. In fine, the indications of the recommencement of hostilities increase daily.

The deputation of the Empire at the Congress of Raftadt have demanded that Hamburg, Bremen, Lubbeck &c. be exempted from all duties on the Rhine. The French have demanded the reason of the march of a Russian army through the German Territory; and were answered that they were not authorized to make any explanations on that subject. An extraordinary coolness has commenced; each seems to wait the other's striking the first blow, to avoid the odium of the renewal of war.

London, October 19.

BREST FLEET.

Dispatches have been received from the lord lieutenant of Ireland, by the lords of the admiralty, which announce that on the 12th October an engagement took place off Tory Island, on the North of Ireland, which was plainly seen from the shore. The whole number of ships were sixteen. The action commenced at 3 o'clock, and lasted 5 hours. Two vessels were sunk, 1 was dismasted, 1 had her sails and rigging cut to pieces, and 5 were running off, pursued by the remainder under British colours. Warren or Home, from their situations, must have been the commander of the British fleet which engaged. In consequence of this news the stocks rose. [Other articles corroborate this intelligence, and even make the success of the British more complete. It is said 3 frigates, which had separated from this squadron, attempted to land troops at Donegal, but were prevented by the inhabitants.]

The Jason of 30 guns, captain Sterling, in chasing 6 vessels into Brest, got upon a rock and beat to pieces. The captain and crew were made prisoners, except six seamen, who jumped into a boat, and after many difficulties reached England.

Three of Nelson's prizes sunk 15 days after the engagement, from the damage they had sustained. Six had proceeded to England.

Lord St. Vincent has informed government of the destruction of the French transports at the Nile.

SOME REFLECTIONS

ON THE EVENTS OF THE YEAR 1793.

WHEN we call into review the various events of the past year, we behold many things for which we have cause sincerely to congratulate with our fellow-citizens, and many others which we shall long remember with unalloyed regret. Such is the lot of man, and such the chequered order of human affairs!—It has been with pleasure that we have noticed a virtuous indignation, spreading through every part of the United States, against the injuries and insults of France—against her perfidious attempts to separate the people from the government—and against the unblushing impudence with which she has dared to proclaim her intentions.

This noble zeal we have seen manifesting itself by an almost universal approbation of the wise and decided measures of a firm and patriotic Executive; in the prompt and unexpected formation of a maritime force; in the organization of numerous bands of volunteers; in the general spread of a military ardor; in the flight of a plundering enemy from our coasts; in the recovery of our honor as a free and independent nation; and in the humbler tone of a haughty and rapacious Directory.

It must be left to time to strip the veil from the face of hypocrisy, and to stop the mouths of cavillers; but with us there is no doubt at present, that this change of language in our enemies, as well as some late equivocal measures, which their advocates represent as conciliatory, are mere tricks of state;—perfidious arts, which, in their new-fangled vocabulary, they still diplomatic skill. This is the persuasion of every well-informed and virtuous American, and he therefore rejoices that preparations for defence, and (we vain would add) for offence, are prosecuted with undiminished vigour. This spirit, and these efforts, we are well assured, have contributed much to produce the change, if any real change there be in the designs of our enemy; and we are convinced that perseverance in the same noble career can alone give efficacy to the past, or insure final deliverance from his depredations.

But although we are fully sensible that the martial spirit, excited in America by the injuries and insults of her enemies, has had its effects on her politics, we do not arrogate the whole merit to ourselves. We have long beheld with pleasure a storm gathering round their heads in Europe, that must have alarmed their apprehensions, and that will require all their resources to combat; we have read with delight the authentic news of their disasters on the coast of Egypt, in the complete destruction of the last fleet they are able to equip, and we glory in being defended from the same illustrious stock, as those heroes, who inflicted the blow. The intrepid Lord Nile, and the brave tars of Old England, have given energy to the voice of American indignation: it is to their valour, and to their blood that we, in some measure, owe the high ground we now stand on.—May the nation reap a full and adequate harvest of glory and of profit from a victory so brilliant! which nothing can prevent but a neglect on her part to employ her superior strength at sea, in spreading devastation and terror along the sea coasts of her relentless enemy.

This is a prospect which gladdens every friend of humanity, and, I need not add, is peculiarly grateful to every honest American.—But before we close our survey of the year, we must turn our eyes to another scene of far different aspect, and contemplate the melancholy havoc of a recent and wide extended pestilence.—We behold the shades of a long train of departed friends and relatives passing before us;—we see the wife suddenly snatched from her husband, and the husband torn from his wife by the inexorable messenger;—we behold the parent weeping over the son, or the daughter, who was the hope and the comfort of his age;—the orphan bewailing the death of a virtuous and affectionate parent, who had been the protector of his infancy, and the guide of his youth;—the young, the old, and the middle aged, of all ranks and descriptions, swept, as in an instant, from the "warm precincts of life," to the gloomy house of clay prepared for all men. "Death came up into our windows," and entered into our palaces, to cut off "the children from without, and the young men, and the old men from the streets;—"our habitations were forsaken, and our "dwellings cast us out."

But in this depressing and melancholy scene of mortality, desolation, and terror, it is a comfortable, and, to individuals, an honorable reflection,—the poor were not forsaken or neglected. Those who were too indigent to transport themselves and their families from the sphere of temporary dwellings; were fed, clothed and educated by contributions from the rich and benevolent; and to the honor of the Board of Health, and of other humane and public-spirited individuals, it will long be recorded in the minds of a grateful multitude, the calamity was mitigated, in every respect, as far as clothing, food, and medicine could afford relief.

This pestilence, although it raged with peculiar mortality in our metropolis and its environs, was not confined there: the same malady was communicated, from the same hateful source, to several other parts of the union; and this source, we have no hesitation in declaring, was our commerce with the West-India islands. Maugre all the philosophy of the modern Paracelsus, whose pertinacity and rage for discoveries have become ridiculous, or the obsequious echoes of his pupil Academy, this fact will not admit of a rational doubt. But although we are relieved, as far as we are able, to remove this foul, paralizing stigma from the metropolis of the United States, we will readily concede that, at a certain season of the year, the atmosphere is prepared to receive and propagate the infection; and we will co-operate with the utmost cheerfulness, we will contribute our full quota, to remove what may be considered as the pabulum of so dreadful a scourge. But to investigate the source of this malady, and to provide against its return, has been transferred to better hands than those of an anonymous scribbler, or even of the Academy of Medicine with Paracelsus at their head; it is under discussion in the General Legislature, as well as that of the State, and we are persuaded it will not be dismissed from either House, until some effectual provision is made. If the means of prevention are happily adopted, it will not only overlet the doctrine of domestic origination, and banish a serious alarm from the minds of the people; but it will reflect lasting honor on the legislators, and command the blessings of thousands of their fellow-citizens.

Gazette Marine List.

Portsmouth, December 22.

Communication from Captain Charles Treatwell.

Arrived in this town, Charles Treatwell, master of the ship Caroline, from this port; who was captured Oct. 13th, ten leagues to windward of Martinico, by the French privateer Bon Meze, Ensign Boile, master, of 8 carriage guns, and 50 men. After running the ship on shore, which occasioned the cutting away the main and mizen masts, brought up at Point Petre, G. Adolphe, where we were but on board the Le Hecle, (or Hercules) prison ship, and met with a number of American prisoners, the most of whom have sailed for America, by way of St. Croix and St. Thomas. The treatment of American prisoners, by the French Government, was at that time highly mortifying, not only personally, but with respect to provisions. The allowance was no more than three ounces of meat and one pound of bread for the 24 hours, and that very bad. Most of the prisoners have been obliged to sign a parole of honor, that they will not serve against the French republic, until a declaration of war took place between the two nations. Victor Hughes is sending off all the property he can get to St. Thomas's. (It is computed that he sent off five vessels within twelve days, upon his own account) and about 25 or 30 privateers on different stations. He had one ship of 385 tons, and a brig of 180 tons, loading at the time of our departure; there were also from 12 to 15 of private armed merchant vessels getting ready for St. Croix and St. Thomas. The Le Pance friate of 44 guns, was ready for sea, and an English prize of 22 guns, 6, 9, and 12 pounders, destined for the coast of Brazil.

A French cutter lately arrived from France was also ready to sail for St. Thomas. The privateer Deux Amices, (or Two Friends) of 14 guns went into Basseterre with the scurr. of 12 guns, from Baltimore, who fought the French privateer two hours.

Yesterday arrived the new Revenue Cutter Scammel Commanded by John Adams, Esq.—We hear she sails remarkably well, and that her sudden return is owing to the severe indisposition of the commander.

We hear that a number of the crew of Hitt-June of this port, taken by the French and carried into Guadaloupe, have died on board the prison-ships.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

All the merchant and other vessels, that sail from Point Petre, sail from the point early in the morning, run along shore, and anchor at Basseterre or one mile to leeward of that port, and on the following night, if no English cruisers are in sight, they get under way and steer W. S. W. or S. W. 12 or 15 leagues, to avoid or clear the Montserrat channel, then haul up for the east or west end of St. Croix.
